

2. The Respondent did, on 5/4/88, accept a request for a transfer and refill of a prescription for patient W.M. Respondent telephoned the originating pharmacy and obtained the name of what he believed the drug prescribed to be. Respondent then dispensed 30 @ Capoten captopril 50 mg tablets, with the instruction TiT.HS (Take one at bedtime). The prescription to be refilled was actually for maprotiline (Ludomil), an antidepressant. Capoten has no generic equivalent and is a high blood pressure medication. There was no consultation with the patient by the respondent or another pharmacist when the drug was delivered to the patient. The patient suffered harm from taking the wrong drug.
